

Contents

Introduction: Economics for the twenty-first century	1
Part I Ideas and tools
1 What the classics know about our world; what twentieth-century economics forgot	11
2 Humans within the biosphere: The paradox of domination and dependence	22
3 Governing the commons fairly	28
4 Spheres of environmental justice	36
5 Natural resources, externalities, and sustainability: A critical toolbox	49
Part II Twenty-first-century social-ecological challenges
6 Biodiversity and ecosystems under growing and unequal pressure	73
7 Beyond EXPOWA (extraction, pollution, and waste)	86
8 Energy, climate, and justice	97
9 Well-being and our environment: From trade-offs to synergies	111
10 Social-ecology: Connecting the inequality and ecological crises	135
11 The social-ecological transition in context: Capitalism, democracy, globalization, and digitalization	154
12 Urban sustainability and polycentric transition	166
Conclusion: Open economics	182
Notes	184
References	200
Index	209